Summary

- Defensive stocks could see gains in the USA yesterday. Today's release of Q3 GDP data may move markets.
- Today marks the debut of Twitter micro-blog site's IPO.
- The euro appreciated in this morning's trading, as investors expect the ECB to resist pressure by leaving its benchmark rate in place.

Wednesday's performance of US stock market was rather mixed. Since the highs hit last Wednesday, the tech-heavy Nasdaq and the index of small-cap stocks, Russell have been lagging behind and closed in the red yesterday. It was mostly the Dow Jones index's defensive names that could achieve gains on Wednesday.

The shares of the popular community site Twitter will be launched on to the markets today. The company will sell 70 million shares (roughly 13% of all shares) to investors, at USD 26 per share.

The euro firmed in this morning's trading, as investors expect the ECB to resist pressure for the time being, and abstain from lowering its benchmark rate. Last week, the eurozone's inflation data came in better than expected; therefore uncertainty about the future of interest rate policy has grown.

Of yesterday's data, neither the National Bank of Poland's rate decision (keeping the rate at 2.5%), nor the eurozone's retail index caused surprise. In a positive surprise, the statistics on German factory orders show material growth.

The first reading of Q3 GDP in the USA will be published today. The annualized QoQ figure is estimated to have increased by 2%. The figure may cause market moves.
