Summary

- BET added 0.5% yesterday ; sentiment is up today after the release of manufacturing PMI (July) data in China and Germany, giving a “thumbs up” to the start of the quarter
- The EUR/RON trades lower this morning, around 4.42; considering the exhausted bond price potential especially on the 3y-5y maturity, the scope for significant appreciation is likely limited
- Private lending dropped further in June, by 3.9% yoY compared to 2.1% in May.

BET added 0.5% yesterday and it moved in line with the dynamics seen in Europe as well. Total equities' turnover stood at EUR 6.2 mn and the deals activity was rather scarce: only 4 trades that made 10% of turnover. Banca Comerciala Carpatica jumped 9.5% on the day after news that the management was mandated to find a partner for a possible merger and that 4 investors have received access to the data. In Europe, major stock indexes ended in the green and sentiment was up as news regarding significant investors in Portugal's lender Banco Espirito Santo made it to the market: yesterday, news was revealed about increased stakes in BES that are held by Goldman Sachs (2.8%) and D.E. Shaw (2.7%) after recent acquisitions on 14-15th July. A batch of July manufacturing PMI data is released today: so far China, Germany and France have announced their readings. In China and Germany, results were better than expected while French data came below expectations at 47.6. So far, this is a “go” signal for stocks and translates into a positive start of the quarter.

The EUR/RON pair fell to 4.42 yesterday. However, with bond price potential exhausted at least on the 3-5Y maturity, we see limited scope for significant appreciation.

Private lending dropped 3.9% YoY in June, after posting a slower decline in May, of 2.1% YoY. The corrections come from the foreign currency components, both in the case of corporations and households. Loans in RON have advanced by 7.3% YoY in June compared to 7% YoY in May whereas in the foreign currency component (EUR equivalent) dropped by 9.2% YoY. Mortgage loans added 7% YoY and the RON component nearly doubled in a year while the FCY has already started to decline (-3% YoY). Private savings are higher by 5.9% YoY and the most dynamic component is the one of RON corporate deposits (+12.8% YoY), a sign that companies still prefer to save to the detriment of making investments.
