Summary

- The Dow, the S&P500, and the NASDAQ all closed at record highs yesterday.
- Crude oil prices rose by more than 4%.
- Most EU members will release their Q2 GDP data today.
- Germany's GDP surged remarkably, by more than 3% YoY in Q2, based on preliminary data.

In the absence of important macroeconomic publications, markets were mostly driven by corporate earnings reports. Western Europe's key indices achieved near-1% gains. The German index's (0.9%) strongest component was Henkel (+5.0%) after publishing its quarterly report yesterday.

Buyers outnumbered sellers in America too, helping the key indices close with modest gains. The main reason for optimism was the more than 4% surge in oil prices on global markets (the table on the left prints this morning's trading data). Accordingly, energy-related businesses' shares posted the strongest gains. The Dow, the S&P 500, and the NASDAQ all closed at record highs.

The euro's 0.4% loss led the EUR/USD to 1.114 yesterday. The greenback did well against the JPY too (advancing 0.8%) thus the USD/JPY ended the day at 102 (the table on the left features this morning's trading figure).

Asia's key indices closed about 1% higher. The macroeconomic data released in China this morning undershot expectations; the year-on-year growth pace of retail sales and urban investments also decelerated noticeably in July.

Investors continue to expect the OPEC's informal meeting in September to reach an agreement; reportedly, non-OPEC oil exporters were also invited. Another factor to support the rebound in crude prices was the International Energy Agency's projection, part of its forecast for Q3, of lower inventories in Q3. The Brent oil soared 4.6%, to 46 USD/barrel. The WTI oil traded 4.5% higher at the end of the day than in the morning (USD 43.4).

The GDP statistics from the European Union may move markets today. Preliminary data suggest that the eurozone's economy may have performed weaker in the second quarter than in the first one. However, a number of countries will release their official figures for the first time, which may change the big picture.

With the German economy's output vastly topping expectations, the eurozone's GDP may surpass the first estimate. The 6% year/year economic growth in Romania has far exceeded expectations; the country is likely to post the biggest growth figure in the European Union, just like in the previous quarter
