Summary

- This week's macroeconomic calendar is light; the NBR will reveal non-government loan and deposit statistics on Thursday.
- The leu weakened around 0.5% compared to the euro last week; Friday's session was rather calm.
- The MoF plans to borrow RON 1 bn today.
- Bucharest's BET inched up on Friday, helped primarily by the 4% rally of Transgaz.

After last week's bunch of data releases, like important updates on 2016 GDP and inflation statistics for January, the macroeconomic calendar is relatively light for this week on the domestic front. On Thursday, the National Bank of Romania will publish monetary indicators, including non-government loan and deposit figures for January. We recall that private credit grew by 1.2% in 2016, helped primarily by the strong surge of RON loans, while deposits continued to expand quite swiftly, adding 8.2% YoY.

Friday's trading on global financial markets was rather calm, with the US dollar reversing its Thursday's losses against the euro. As a result, the pair finished the day near 1.06. At the same time, Romania's leu marginally weakened versus the euro, while other currencies of the CEE region lost a bit more, in the range of 0.2%-0.3%. In weekly comparison, the leu gave up around 0.5% compared to the euro.

Today the Ministry of Finance puts up for sale RON 1 bn debt via 12M bills. The yields on the benchmark securities eased two basis points on average on Friday. Nonetheless, the yield curve became steeper on weekly basis.

In Europe, primarily corporate updates were the drivers of equity markets in an otherwise quiet session. The key indices finished the trading mixed, with London's FTSE 100 advancing 0.3%, and with the French CAC 40 dipping almost 0.7%. Simultaneously, US stock inched modestly higher on Friday. In Bucharest, the BET climbed 0.4%, first of all fuelled by Transgaz's 4% rally, but the shares of the TLV as well as Nuclearelectrica also pointed to nice gains (1.0% and 0.8% respectively).
