Summary

- The turnover index of market services provided to the population pointed to increases in January .
- Cautious trading characterized yesterday's session on global financial markets; the EUR/RON climbed higher.
- Monday's bond auction was unsuccessful amid weak demand from primary dealers.
- The BET finished the first trading day of the week a touch lower.

The turnover index of market services provided to the population increased by 2.5% MoM (seasonally and working day adjusted statistics) and 4.7% YoY (gross data), the NIS said this morning.

Trading on global financial markets was quite cautious yesterday, as investors stood mostly on the side-lines, waiting for potentially market moving events, like the Fed's monetary policy meeting and Dutch elections, scheduled for this week. On Wednesday, the Federal Reserve will conclude its two-day long policy meeting. According to the expectations, the FOMC (Federal Open Market Committee) will raise the benchmark interest rate by 25 bps. This anticipation was also cemented by last Friday's strong job statistics. The non-farm payroll report revealed that the US economy created 235,000 new jobs in February, surprising on the upside, while the unemployment rate stood at 4.7%. On Monday, the US dollar gained some ground against the common European currency. At the same time, the EUR/RON climbed modestly higher yesterday, in contrast with other currencies of the CEE region.

Monday's government bond auction was unsuccessful, after primary dealers subscribed for only RON 288 mn versus the announced amount of RON 300 mn. Amid the weak demand, debt managers decided to reject all of the bids.

Global stock markets recorded small changes yesterday, with the key European indices finishing a bit higher, while their US peers closed mixed. In Bucharest, the BET index went a touch lower, after its ten components moved in different directions.
