Summary

- Europe's equity markets were rather pessimistic on Thursday, US markets were closed on Thanksgiving Day
- The EU and the UK have agreed on post-Brexit relations
- The GBP has strengthened versus the EUR.
- The November reading of EZ consumer confidence was disappointing.

In Thursday's sour trading sentiment in Europe, the Stoxx600 dropped 0.7%, the DAX fell 0.9% and the FTSE100 lost 1.3%. The losers of the day came from the pharmaceutical and banking sectors. Britain's AstraZeneca shrank 1.8%, and in the financial world, HSBC slumped 1.5% and BNP Paribas slipped 1.3%. A drop in crude prices weighed on oil companies: Royal Dutch Shell and British Petrol both slid 1%. US markets observed Thanksgiving Day, and those in Japan are closed today.

On Thursday the European Council's President Donald Tusk announced the Council's agreement with the United Kingdom on post-Brexit relations. The draft deal, agreed at negotiators' level, hinges on endorsement of leaders. This is likely to take place on Sunday's extraordinary EU summit. The deal aims to secure the liberalization of goods and services well beyond the commitments to the World Trade Organization. The transition period is to begin on 29 March 2019, with the UK's withdrawal from the European Union, and last until end-2020, which can be extended once, by one or two years.

Italy's defiance against the European Commission may be fading. Italy needs to reach an agreement with the European Commission soon, because the country 'will not hold up for long', EU minister Paolo Savona said to media on Thursday. The Commission proposed excessive deficit procedure against Italy after its government had raised the deficit target in its 2019 budget. Savona did not rule out amendments to fiscal plans – economy minister Giovanni Tria supports the idea, while the interior minister Salvini is opposed to it. The news triggered a 4.7-basis-point fall in Italy's 10Y government bond yield.

The EUR lost 0.6% against the British pound but gained 0.2% from the US dollar. The forint's 0.2% appreciation sent the EUR/HUF to 321.2 last night.

The WTI crude slumped 2.7%, drawing closer to the more-than-one-year low hit on 20 November.

Despite the intensifying downside risks to growth, the ECB's decision-makers continue to agree on phasing out the asset purchase programme at the end of this year, the minutes of the latest policy meeting revealed.

A number of important economies will publish PMIs (purchasing managers' indices) today. It may be worth keeping an eye on the 25 November EU summit, where leaders will vote on finalizing the Brexit deal.
