

Summary

- Stock markets opened the week on a weak note.
- China's disappointing foreign trade data brought global growth fears to the fore.
- The UK Parliament votes on the Brexit agreement today.

China's disheartening foreign trade statistics left their mark on Monday's trading on the stock markets of the world – exports slid 7.6% and imports fell 4.4%, whereas analysts had projected growth in both items. Fears of economic deceleration in China, and worldwide, have resurfaced, sending the benchmark stock indices down on the first day of the business week. In Europe, the Stoxx600 lost 0.5% of its value, the FTSE shrank 0.9%, and the DAX dropped 0.3%. The sentiment was fragile in the UK ahead of today's Brexit vote in Parliament. The deteriorating global growth outlook, in the wake of the pale figures from China, dragged down commodity producers. Antofagasta closed 2.6% down, AngloAmerican slipped 1.8%, BHP reversed 1%, while Fresnillo and Glencore sank 1.5% each. AstraZeneca shrank 3.6% as yet another top official stepped down, following the reorganization of the pharmaceutical company. Financial service providers and retail chains were the winners of the day in London. Within the DAX, the chemical segment was ailing: Beiersdorf gave back 2.4%, Linde lost 1.3%, Bayer shed 1.1%, while BASF and Henkel contracted by 0.7% each.

America's stock indices also closed lower yesterday. At one point on Monday, the Dow stood more than 200 points in the red, but closed only 0.4% down. The S&P slipped 0.5%, and the Nasdaq100 lost 0.9% yesterday. Of the S&P's constituents, only financial service providers avoided losses. The publication of Citigroup's quarterly figures marked the beginning of the Q4 earnings season; the bank's cheering profit figures benefited its peers too. Citigroup's share price jumped 4% higher, Bank of America's shares gained 1.3%, and JPMorgan upped 1%. The loser of the day within S&P was the utilities sector, as the Californian-based PG&E energy service provider is likely to file for bankruptcy, which slashed its stock price by 52%. Health care, telecom businesses, commodity producers, and the cyclical consumption sector's companies all underperformed. Investors did not appreciate Newmont Mining's plans to buy the Goldcorp gold mining company; Newmont nose-dived 9%. Chipmakers fell 3–4%; Apple slipped 1.5%. Later this week, a number of earnings reports are due out: JP Morgan and Wells Fargo will release them on Tuesday; Bank of America, BlackRock, and Goldman are to report on Wednesday; while Morgan Stanley and Netflix will publish their figures on Thursday.

The sentiment was unsupportive in the CEE region, where WIG20 shed 0.3%, the BUX sank 0.5%, and the PX dropped 1%.

Currency markets had a quiet day on Monday. The EUR/USD barely moved, while the GBP firmed 0.1% versus the US dollar.

On the commodity market, the drop in crude oil prices continued, with WTI slipping 2.1% and Brent sliding 2.5%. Gold upped 0.2%.

Optimism ruled Asia's markets this morning, when most stock indices were in positive territory. China's top economic policy officials promised tax cuts, in an effort to boost the economy. The S&P and Stoxx50 futures both indicate a pick-up. The US dollar is weakening, even against the British pound.

Turkey's retail statistics, and Germany's whole-year 2018 GDP statistics as well as budget balance data are due out today. In the USA, the New York manufacturing PMI is scheduled for release – but the government shutdown prevents a string of US data from being published in time. The lack of information causes uncertainty, which may have negative consequences, warned the Fed.

Today is the parliamentary vote on the UK's Brexit agreement with the EU. Reportedly, the current form of the UK's withdrawal divides both the Tory and the Labour parties.
