Summary

- British MPs rejected the Brexit withdrawal deal; the Labour Party tabled no-confidence motion.
- China is planning tax cuts to boost its economy.

The House of Commons of the British parliament was in the centre of attention last night, when after market close MPs voted on the UK's Brexit withdrawal plan, which the EU had adopted. As expected, the plan was turned down, and only the whopping number of Nay votes caused surprise (432 vs 202). Investors welcomed the outcome, as it fuels hopes that the United Kingdom might remain in the EU. Following the vote, the Labour Party tabled a no-confidence motion, to be voted today. If Theresa May's government is defeated, early elections will follow, further hindering the UK's exit from the bloc. After the vote, European leaders urged the UK to clarify the situation. Prior to the vote, the FTSE100 closed 0.6% higher. After the vote, the GBP notably firmed against the key currencies, but ran out of steam by the end of the day. The UK 10Y bond yield sank four basis points (to 1.26%). Europe's most important indices posted slight gains.

In addition to the Brexit vote result, China's planned economic stimulus also cheered investors in the USA, helping the key indices achieve gains. Fuelled by the technology sector's March higher, the Nasdaq100 excelled with 2% growth. Banks' earnings reports disappointed yesterday: JP Morgan published disheartening figures on the revenue and earnings per share lines. Meanwhile, Wells Fargo published a mixed bag of Q4 data; its revenue missed estimations, while the EPS surprised on the upside.

The euro lost 0.6% against the US dollar, after Mario Draghi mentioned a weaker-than-expected growth in the eurozone, speaking at a ceremony in Strasbourg, to mark the 20th anniversary of introducing the euro. However, the ECB Governing Council's president also pointed out that this was just a deceleration, which would not lead to recession, but may be longer than expected.

WTI price rose by 2.8%, wiping out the previous two days' losses, closing the day near USD 52. Brent printed a similar pattern, climbing 2.5%, to USD 60.6.

Asia's key indices ended mixed this morning. Japan's Nikkei225 ended in the red, while China's Shanghai Composite closed nearly flat.

Today's key events include the no-confidence note in Britain, and Brexit-related news. In the USA, the Fed Beige Book, as well as the December retail sales data is due out – but the US government shutdown may delay the publication of data. Banks' earnings report season will continue with the figures of Bank of America and Goldman Sachs.
