Summary

- Germany's car manufacturers fared well on Tuesday; the ZEW economic sentiment index for March surpassed the weak expectations.
- China is pushing back on some of the USA's demands in the bilateral trade talks.
- The Fed Open Market Committee's two-day monetary policy meeting is to end today.

Tuesday's sentiment was fairly positive on Western Europe's key stock markets. Fuelled by the rally of the auto industry and its suppliers, Germany's DAX excelled yesterday. The optimism also benefited from the March reading of the ZEW sentiment index on the German economy. Despite remaining in negative territory, the index meaningfully exceeded expectations. The new episode in the Brexit saga comes with speculations if the 29 March deadline would be extended, as the Speaker of the House of Commons ruled out another vote on Theresa May's Brexit deal in its current form.

Trade war-related reports cast clouds over the last hours of trading in America, where only the Nasdaq100 could climb into positive territory. Citing American negotiators, Bloomberg said China was pushing back on a number of US demands. The euro's uptick sent the EUR/USD higher in Tuesday's trading.

The USA imposed sanctions on Venezuela's state-owned Minerven gold mine and its head, claiming that President Maduro uses the gold to finance the army to win its support.

Today the Fed Open Market Committee's meeting and its new economic forecast may influence markets. The fed funds rates are expected to be left at 2.25-2.5, but new information may emerge about the framework of the balance sheet tapering, and about any rate hikes later in the year. In Brexit-related news, we may learn on what grounds and for how long Theresa May's government will request an extension to the departure date.
