Summary

- Wednesday's trading was cheerful on the developed world's stock markets.
- The DAX hit all-time high; Germany's 10Y bond yield returned to positive territory.
- The UK House of Commons voted that Theresa May should seek an extension to Brexit deadline.

The progress made in Sino-American talks gave rise to optimism on developed stock markets on Wednesday. Risk appetite in the eurozone was boosted by the final reading of Markit purchasing managers' indices, which overshoot the preliminary data. Europe's best performer, Germany's DAX grew by 1.7%, to close at all-time high. Rising by six basis points, Germany's 10Y yield arrived into positive territory (+0.01%).

The EU was quick to react to the idea of extending Brexit deadline until 22 May. Rejecting a short Brexit extension, Jean-Claude Juncker indicated that the UK had to sign up for a long delay, and with proper reasoning. On Wednesday afternoon Jeremy Corbin and Theresa May discussed the future of Brexit; both parties called the talks constructive, without going into details. In a tight vote of 313-312, the House of Commons passed the bill to urge Theresa May to seek an extension to the 12 April departure date. Now it needs to pass the House of Lords. The 10Y bond yield rose by nine basis points (+1.1%). The pound slightly dropped against the euro.

The key indices of the USA closed with gains. What leaked out from Sino-American trade talks is that China may be given time until 2025 to meet its commitments on commodity purchases and to fulfil pledges to allow American-owned companies to wholly own Chinese enterprises. ADP's employment report cast a light shadow on yesterday's trading, as its increase undershot expectations, boding ill for Friday's official data release. Disappointingly, the ISM non-manufacturing PMI sank to a 20-month low of 56.1 - but it is still far above the mark that signifies recession. The 10Y bond yield upped four basis points (+2.52%). The EUR/USD edged higher.

Brent and WTI edged lower. The prices of the key industrial metals grew yesterday.

Asia's key indices closed mixed this morning. The yen appreciated versus the US dollar. This morning Germany published discouraging factory orders data: the February figure reflects a continued sharp fall whereas analysts had expected a modest uptick from January's month/month drop.

The minutes of the ECB's March meeting will be out today. The USA is to release jobless claims data.
