Summary

- Wednesday's trading sentiment was supportive in the USA, while Europe was mostly ailing.
- The Fed held interest rate decision yesterday.
- Boris Johnson won a new round of the Tory leadership race, by a large margin.
- The USD has weakened.

America's stock indices closed with gains on Wednesday, when the Dow inched up 0.1%, the S&P500 added 0.3%, and the Nasdaq100 grew by 0.4%. The Fed's post-meeting statement and the dovish message in the subsequent press briefing benefited the sentiment. In the corporate world, one of the winners of the day was Adobe. The software company's shares rallied 5.2% as its earnings data exceeded analysts' expectations. Facebook shares lost 0.5%, following criticism of its cryptocurrency, from US politicians and the regulatory authorities.

Europe's key stock indices did not fare well on Wednesday. London's FTSE100 fell 0.5%, Germany's DAX shed 0.2%, the pan-European Stoxx600 stagnated, while France's CAC40 inched up 0.2%. Financial companies fared well on Wednesday; the sector's index grew by 1.4%. The auto industry also advanced: the sector index upped 1% as the USA-China trade war conflict seems to ease, ahead of the G20 meeting.

The FOMC's two-day meeting concluded by leaving the key interest rates on hold, as expected. The accompanying statement said rate cuts were not likely in 2019, but added that central bankers would closely monitor signs of muted inflation and growing uncertainty. Monetary policy decision-makers wanted to dampen market expectations of rate cuts while leaving enough room for a monetary easing. The Fed acknowledged the 'uncertainties' that surround economic growth, referring to the USA-China trade war's negative effect on US exporters, and to the disappointing employment figure for May. The central bank reduced its 2019 inflation forecast from 1.8% to 1.5%, and does not expect consumer price growth to reach 2% by 2021. Speaking at the post-meeting press conference, Chair Jerome Powell made a clearly 'dovish' statement, pointing out the Fed's commitment to supporting economic growth. This is a strong indication that monetary policy decision-makers are ready to cut interest rates if needed.

The Tory leadership race continued with the third ballot on Wednesday. The most likely winner, Boris Johnson won 143 votes from the 313-strong faction. Two ballots are due today, narrowing down the number of candidates to two.

The Fed's post-meeting message led to the USD's weakening; the EUR/USD grew by 0.3%. The 10Y US Treasury Note yield came down 3.1 basis points, and that of the 2Y bond fell 9.6 bps.

The Bank of England is to hold interest rate decision today. Statistics on US unemployment claims, as well as the eurozone's consumer confidence index are due out today.
